Master of Public Policy (MPP)

About the course

The Master of Public Policy (MPP) is a one-year taught degree course. It enables you to develop analytical and critical skills relevant for understanding the challenges of public policy and its implementation. It also equips you with skills that are essential for effective policy delivery.

The MPP begins with a selection of introductory activities. These provide a practical introduction to policy making and the MPP as a whole. The curriculum is then orientated around academic learning and practical skills necessary for effective policy-making and analysis.

The curriculum includes six compulsory core modules:

Foundations introduces philosophical concepts and dilemmas facing governments around the world

Economics for Public Policy focuses on understanding economic pressures on governments and how economists across the world analyse public policy

The Organization and Practice of Government introduces the challenges of implementing effective policies across a range of political environments and issue areas

Science and Public Policy considers ways of understanding scientific and medical evidence, the policy implications of this evidence, and the interplay between science and conflicting policy concerns

Law and Public Policy discusses legal systems, legislation, and law both as a constraint on government and as applicable beyond the nation state

Policy Evaluation demonstrates the contribution that research evidence can make to public policy and provides you with tools that allow you to be a more effective and critical consumer of research evidence

These core modules draw on insights and approaches found within a range of academic disciplines. They engage high-level policy makers and academics who will share with you their experiences of real-world problems and policies.

The academic modules are taken alongside a number of more practically-oriented modules. These include applied policy modules that have previously covered such topics as strategy, communication, finance, and negotiation. There are also professional skills sessions throughout the year, aimed at developing your communication, practical, and career development skills.

In the third term, you have the opportunity to select two option modules allowing you to specialise on issues of particular interest to you. You then undertake a six-to-eight week summer project where you embark on a placement with a governmental, non-governmental, or private organisation to work on a mutually agreed-upon programme. The BSG website provides more information about the summer project. At the end of your placement you submit a related policy analysis and reflective essay. You then have the option to return to Oxford later in the year to take part in graduation-related events.

Additional cost information

There may be additional fees associated with the 6 to 8 week summer project. Students choose their host organisation and the topic of their summer project depending on their individual interests. MPP students have undertaken their summer projects with organisations across all sectors; government, non-profit, international and the private sector. The location of summer projects also greatly varies depending on a student's interests. Some students decide to carry out their summer project in Oxford or elsewhere in the UK, some return to their home countries and others undertake projects elsewhere in the world. Therefore, costs associated with the summer project may vary depending on the location.

Students will need to meet the costs of travel, accommodation and living expenses, if applicable. Host organisations are sometimes able to provide funding for additional costs associated with a student's summer project. Where this is not possible students must seek alternative sources of funding. In addition, the School has a limited MPP summer project bursary fund to which students may apply for funding. The BSG website provides more information about the Summer Project.
