We understand you want to celebrate after your exams, especially after the challenges of this year. However, trashing has significant negative social, financial and personal impacts. This year, taking part in it could breach COVID-19 rules – putting the wider community at risk.

A small gathering can quickly grow, meaning you’ll be breaching health guidance, and risk spreading COVID-19.

Trashing costs the University more than £25,000 each year.

Whatever you use, it still needs cleaning up and has a negative impact on the environment.

Wasted food could be donated to those most in need in Oxford.

Remain vigilant around social distancing and avoid gatherings.

It reinforces negative stereotypes about Oxford students.

Avoid the disruption. Spend it elsewhere. Protect our community.
